

I aspire to attend a graduate program, but also believe that I need a break from school to obtain working experience and find the field of research I am passionate about. Upon graduation on May 20th, 2018, I am going home - Rwanda- to tackle one of the flagrant global issues- (youth unemployment). During my project, I am aiming to find viable solutions to the disconnection between available employment opportunities and underemployment prevalent among Rwandan youth. Many young adults in Rwanda are unaware of the existing youth initiatives, and for those who do, they barely know how and where to find the right information. The research is to be conducted to meet the following specific objectives and results.

- Identifying key stakeholders and in youth employability in the two districts
- Identifying youth employability opportunities
- Describing awareness level of opportunities that will be identified
- Describing the challenges affecting youth in leveraging the opportunities offered unto them.
- Providing strategies and viable solution to the research question posed.
